Mike O'Malley

Owner

Mailboxes & More, Escondido, CA

It makes sense that Mike O'Malley's business would be called 'Mailboxes & More', as he offers so much more to his community than just shipping services. Mr. O'Malley owns two stores in Escondido, California, where he works, lives, and participates in activities that positively affect the health of not only the children in his community, but also fellow countrymen overseas.

Mike O'Malley is one of the several business owners involved in the success of the Halloween Candy Buy Back program taking place in San Diego County. This is a national effort that enables dentists to register to buy excess, unopened Halloween candy back from children and their families in order to ship over as a treat to US troops via a nonprofit called Operation Gratitude. The local efforts are spearheaded by Business domain champion Sabrina Covington RD, a founder of the Healthy Kids' Choice Initiative and a customer at Mailboxes & More.

Mike recalled the day Sabrina came into the store and explained the program. Mike not only agreed to donate his business's time and services to ship the candy overseas to US troops, but he mobilized other shipping businesses in the area to become involved as well. Mike is a true believer of the idea that good health starts at an early age. Supporting a program that supports children's health seemed like a good fit for Mike and the role he wanted to play in making a difference. He recognizes that childhood diabetes and childhood obesity are big problems not only across the nation, but right at home as well.

After his first year participating in the Halloween Candy Buy Back in 2009, he recognized and appreciated a feeling of being a part of his community. Mike turned his two stores into collection centers for the candy—and this past year, collected approximately 700lbs to 800 pounds of candy! The grocery store next store donated their left over candy to the program as well. His involvement in such a community-wide effort has opened up doors to help him meet people he may not have met otherwise.

"I wasn't looking at this from an angle to get business, but it actually helped. We're supposed to be taking care of each other. It's a business's responsibility to really work in the community."

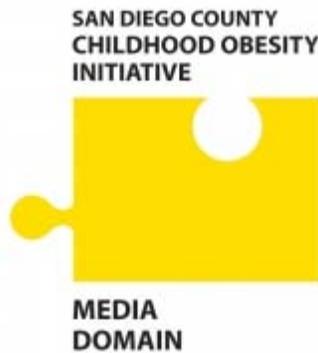

Mike appreciates the efforts of other partners involved in the Candy Buy Back program as well. Although this has been a simple program to administer, he was fortunate to have some financial support from Palomar Pomerado Health, which stepped up to help sponsor the shipping. He also recognizes the critical involvement of the community's dentists.

"The dentists [and pediatricians] were donating their own money to buy back all this excess candy from kids, and it was great. In the past few years, it has been so hard to get by in this economy, so watching people in all different parts of the community contribute has been amazing," Mike said.

Mike is from Midlothian, Illinois, a small town just south of Chicago. As a young man, he joined the Navy, came to San Diego and never looked back. Having served in the armed forces himself, he understands how something as small as candy can raise the morale of the troops, particularly because in many cases they are young men.

"Whenever we got a package of anything from any one, it meant a lot to us," he said in his recollection of his time in the service.

When Mike isn't busy operating his two stores and helping organize his business community around events such as the Candy Buy Back, he is enjoying his life here in sunny California. Mike has been married for 23 years and has two kids. He enjoys playing golf, and paying visits to Monterey to see his son.

FARMERS' MARKET CORNER

Healthy Works is supporting the next phase of garden education in San Diego County. The Healthy Works School and Community Gardens Program is a partnership with the County of San Diego Health and Human Services Agency; University of California San Diego (UCSD); San Diego County Childhood Obesity Initiative (Initiative), a program facilitated by Community Health Improvement Partners (CHIP); and Victory Gardens San Diego (VGSD), a program of San Diego Roots Sustainable Food Project. This three-tier program is promoting the development of garden-friendly policies at school and in the community and places for garden education.

As part of the Healthy Works School and Community Gardens Program, the International Rescue Committee, Olivewood Gardens & Learning Center, San Diego Roots Sustainable Food Project, San Diego Youth Services, and Solana Center for Environmental Innovation have been selected to host Regional Garden Education Centers (RGEC), community-based hubs for garden education and training. The RGEC model is based on the VGSD "University of Gardening" or "U-Gardening" education program which offers hands-on, basic garden education. The RGEC program extends this model to include classes in basic, community, and school gardening. It offers classroom education and hands-on experience.

About the Curricula

Gardening 101: How to Grow Your Own Food

This course offers eight lessons on the basics of gardening, including: organics and permaculture; garden siting and design; soil and composting; plants and botany; seeding and planting; irrigation; weeds, pests, and disease; and harvesting. This series will provide students with a mix of classroom education and hands-on garden experience.

Gardening 201: How to Start and Manage a Community Garden

This course offers six lessons on the fundamentals of community garden organizing and management, including: asset-based community development, finding and obtaining land, budgeting and fundraising, garden design and supplies, day to day operations, and how to be a good neighbor. This series will provide classroom education and opportunities for active discussion and planning.

Gardening 301: How to Start and Sustain a School Garden

This course offers seven lessons on building support for school gardens among peers, educators, and administrators, including: making the case for school gardens, building a school garden leadership team, garden planning and design, budgeting and fundraising for your garden, community partnerships and volunteers, curriculum and outdoor classroom management, and gardens as part of the wellness movement.

This series will provide classroom education and opportunities for active discussion and brainstorming. These sites will provide courses to the public at no cost from May 2011 to February 2012. Each site will host a regional tool lending library, a place where local residents can go to borrow garden tools and resources to support efforts at home or in the community. The RGEC sites are designed to spark a dynamic conversation between local community members and organizations on the role gardens can play in shaping a healthy, sustainable future.

If you know of a food access initiative in San Diego County promoting health through innovative activities or would like to learn more about a highlighted project, please contact JuliAnna Arnett.
